The vast majority of attacks on officers begin with communication: they tell you it's coming.

Stopping violence before it starts is a learnable and necessary skill. Too often, officers are reactive to aggression rather than predictive. Preparing for a violent encounter requires that you quickly and accurately identify behaviors that indicate vicious intent. How to Predict Violence & Influence Behavior begins by delving deeply into the science of Kinesics and the study of body language, stances, gestures, and micro-expressions. Using videos of recent attacks on officers, we analyze subtle movements, mannerisms, and warning signs of impending aggression. We also discuss how these same skills can assist in getting confessions.

We discuss the critical importance of your own behavior and how it can be affected by emotion and stress. Learn what science tells us about the key techniques to controlling, redirecting, and influencing others. Once learned, you can control the outcome of a potentially deadly encounter.

Old-school "verbal defense" classes train old-school communication theory. This course was developed using today's research in the science of human behavior and decades of real street experience. Course topics include:

- The 5 Truths of Human Behavior: Read the Signs
- Situational Awareness: You, the Subject & the Environment
- Statement Analysis: What They Don't Know They're Saying
- The Critical Signs: Intent, Motivation & Hidden Meanings
- Spotting Lies: Active Listening & the Right Questions
- The 8 Essentials of Getting Confessions
- Language & the Use of Force
- Avoiding Stress-Induced Blindness
- The Power of Thinking Without Thinking
